General Information

It is an existing condition of Your policy that you take all reasonable precautions to avoid loss or damage to underground pipes, cables or other services (General Condition 11).

Fibre optic cables and other underground services

British Telecom is undertaking a programme of replacing some existing underground cables with FIBRE OPTIC CABLES. These cables are made of strands of glass fibre and transmit messages by a series of light pulses which travel along the fibres and in many instances they will simply be laid in the existing cable ducts which are normally made of earthenware.

Each cable is less than one inch in diameter and the larger ducts may carry up to 20 fibre optic cables which cannot be repaired if damaged.

The cables are laid in 2 kilometre lengths and the cost of replacing one cable of this length is estimated to be £10,000 plus labour and other charges. In view of the number of cables in some ducts, damage could result in a claim cost in excess of £250,000.

It is essential that those engaged in excavation works establish whether there are any underground services in the vicinity of the proposed excavations. The need to check for fibre optic cables is even more important in view of the expensive replacement costs and the effect that such a claim could have on the premium and terms for your insurance policy.

British Telecom operates a nationwide Freefone cable location service 'Dial Before You Dig' on 0800 917 3993. There are also many local arrangements.

You must always ring British Telecom prior to excavation to ensure that there are no fibre optic or other cables in the area of your work and also contact the other service organisations to enquire whether other underground pipes or cables may be in the area.
